15th Sunday in Ordinary Time

July 11, 2010

When Moses gives the people God's Law he makes it quite clear that they have not been given any impossible task, because the strength and will for obeying come from God himself who lives actually within a person. Having made us in the first place, he knows us even better than we know ourselves, and so he fully understands our weakness, lack of perseverance and capacity for rebellion.

Yet his knowledge of us is not all; he also loves us and longs for our well-being and peace of mind. Knowing that man can only find these things in loving God and his neighbor unselfishly, he provides not only the Law of Love, but the strength and power to achieve it.

It is when we separate ourselves from that strength and power that things begin to go badly wrong, both in ourselves and in our world.
